Columbia Gas rebates OK'd for 'green' repairs

The Public Utilities Commission of Ohio approved a rebate program yesterday from Columbia Gas of Ohio that will give customers incentives to make their homes more energy-efficient.

But the commission still needs to approve Columbia's proposal for how to pay for the $2.5 million program. That proposal is part of Columbia's request to raise customer fees for delivering natural gas by about $[illegible] per month for average customers. That issue is expected to be resolved by fall.

The rebate program would take effect in January and last three years, giving customers the chance to get rebates for part of the cost of sealing air leaks, adding insulation or replacing a furnace. Columbia would pay for the program by charging its customers about [illegible] per month for three years.
