Case No. 07-478-GA-UNC

SURREBUTTAL TESTIMONY OF PHILIP E. RILEY, JR. ON BEHALF OF UTILITY SERVICE PARTNERS, INC.

1 Q.1. Please state your name and business address.

2 A.1. Philip E. Riley, Jr., President and CEO of Utility Service Partners, Inc., 480
3 Johnson Road, Suite 100, Washington, PA 15301.

4 Q.2. Are you the same Philip E. Riley, Jr. who previously presented direct 5 testimony in this proceeding?

6 A.2. Yes.

7 Q.3. What is the purpose of your surrebuttal testimony?

8 A.3. I am filing testimony on behalf of Utility Service Partners, Inc. (“USP”) in 9 response to rebuttal testimony filed by Columbia Gas of Ohio, Inc.

10 Q.4. Do you agree with Mr. Martin’s assertion in his rebuttal testimony that the 11 IRP will provide cost efficiencies when compared to the current system
12 established for customer service lines?

13 A.4. No. As I stated at page 10, line 17 of my direct testimony in this proceeding, 14 Columbia’s plan to have its customers assume financial responsibility for the 15 maintenance, repair and replacement of customer-owned service lines and to own

1 new or replaced service lines does not generate any cost efficiencies over the 2 current system in which Columbia inspects and the property owner repairs and/or 3 replaces the customer service line. Columbia will still be required to inspect all 4 service lines in its service territory every three years in accordance with the 5 Department of Transportation (“DOT”) regulations. The actual repair work will 6 still be done by DOT Operator Qualified plumbers and contractors. And as I
7 testified earlier in this proceeding, USP’s estimated average cost to replace a
8 leaking customer service line was $910 for the calendar year 2007 up to August 9 31, 2007. This is less than Columbia’s estimated average cost of $1,000 to 10 replace a leaking customer service line. Rather than saving Ohio customers 11 money, the IRP transfers the cost of customer service line repairs from the 12 property owners to all rate payers, regardless whether the rate payer owns a 13 service line or not. This is not a cost efficiency.

14 Q.5. Do you agree with Mr. Ramsey’s assertion in his rebuttal testimony that the 15 IRP will eliminate confusion regarding responsibility for leaks on customer
16 service lines?

17 A.5. No. Today, in Ohio, it is very clear that the property owner owns all gas lines on 18 the property, whether the gas lines are customer service lines, buried house lines,
19 internal house lines or ancillary lines. And it is also clear that if there is a gas leak 20 the customer should call the gas company. What is not clear is how the IRP will 21 avoid creating confusion because the IRP results in dual ownership of service
22 lines (when partial repairs are made), transfers responsibility for some but not all

1 gas lines on the property to Columbia and creates a new ownership/repair scheme
2 in Columbia's service area that is not used in any other service area in Ohio.

3 Neither Columbia nor the Staff has presented any studies or statistical 4 evidence of customer confusion. The only evidence of confusion presented so far
5 in this matter are undocumented memories of telephone calls from unspecified
6 customers. This purported evidence of confusion is contradicted by the long,
7 successful history of the current system and the resources available to customers
8 regarding customer service lines.

9 First, customer ownership of service lines has been the practice in Ohio
10 for decades. Second, both Columbia and the Commission maintain websites
11 providing information to consumers on the ownership of customer owned service 12 lines. Attached as Exhibit USP-R1 is information from Columbia's website at 13 www.columbiagasohio.com including a subsection titled "Natural gas lines –
14 What is your responsibility?" and a section titled "Does the service line in your 15 yard need repair to fix a gas leak." Columbia even provides a 74 page list of 16 plumbing companies with DOT operator qualified employees on its website
17 (attached as Exhibit USP-R2) and states, at 18 www.columbiagasohio.com/whatsNew/plumberRegulations.asp that "[f]or gas 19 line repairs on customer-owned service lines or meter settings, please refer to 20 local yellow pages, chambers of commerce, municipal building/permitting
21 offices, Internet Web searches, etc. for plumbers/contractors qualified to perform 22 the required work." Also, attached as Exhibit USP-R3, is information from the 23 Commission's website at www.puco.ohio.gov, including an faq on "[w]ho is

1 responsible for repair or maintenance of the riser and natural gas service line?”

2 Columbia and the Staff have presented no evidence indicating that their 3 information efforts are not successful.

4 Most convincing of all though is that property owners are aware of their 5 repair responsibilities and the industry’s response of making service available is 6 in the local yellow pages. In addition to the online resources, a review of the local 7 yellow pages shows that customers can quickly find resources to assist them in 8 repairing customer service lines. For example, attached as Exhibit USP-R4 are 9 pages 589-590 and pages 1017 to 1040 from the AT&T The Real Yellow Pages,
10 September 2007 which contain advertisements for natural gas and plumbing
11 contractors. Natural gas contractors and plumbers would not be listing and 12 advertising in the local yellow pages if the owners of the service lines where so ill
13 informed that they didn’t know they have repair responsibilities for customer
14 service lines.

15 Rather than simplifying the system, the IRP will add confusion. For 16 example, today throughout Ohio, the demarcation for customer service line
17 ownership is clear, at the property line. Under the IRP, Columbia would be 18 responsible for the repair and/or replacement of all leaking customer service lines
19 in its service area. However, the vast majority of property owners in the State
20 will continue to be responsible for the repair and/or replacement of leaking
21 customer service lines. People moving into Columbia’s service area from other 22 service areas would not be aware of the difference, generating real confusion.
23 Also, under the IRP, Columbia will only own the portion of the service line that is

1 repaired or replaced. So a property owner could end up owning sections of the 2 customer service line, Columbia would own other sections and with the customer
3 service lines being buried underground, there would be no demarcation as to 4 ownership and a new owner of a home would have no idea as to what portion of 5 the customer service line he or she owns.

6 Finally, under the IRP Columbia is only repairing the portion of the gas
7 line up to the meter. The portion from the meter to the house (commonly called 8 the house line) is still the property owner's responsibility as well as all the gas
9 lines in the house and auxiliary lines from the house to the swimming pool
10 heaters, patio gas grills or gas decorative lighting. Right now I believe the 11 message is simple and straight forward - if a gas line is leaking anywhere to any 12 degree on the property, the property owner is responsible. If the IRP is approved 13 the message will be that customer service line repair responsibility from the 14 property line to the Columbia meter will be done by Columbia while all leaks in 15 gas lines from the meter to the house, or to an outside gas grill or the decorative 16 lighting, or the swimming pool as well as inside the house are the responsibility of 17 the property owner – except if you are outside the Columbia service area in which 18 case the property owner has responsibility for all gas lines.

19 Q.6 Why does USP not object to Columbia taking ownership of the risers?

20 A.6. The Design-A risers (plastic field assembled risers) have been identified as a 21 hazard by the Commission that must be replaced. The Design A riser is a unique 22 problem with no precedent in Ohio. In terms of responsibility, it is the local 23 distribution company's duty to specify the type lines and risers that can be used

1 for customer service lines. In the case of the Design A risers, Columbia and 2 several other local distribution companies approved what extensive testing by an 3 outside consultant has now found to be a riser that is defective and prone to 4 failure. Columbia's Design A riser problem is larger than other utilities because 5 Columbia's survey shows that it has some 300,000 Design A risers in its service
6 area. Although I believe that the property owners are capable of changing over
7 the Design A risers themselves, USP has chosen not to oppose the part of the IRP
8 plan addressing the Design A risers for three reasons.

9 First, Columbia has a great deal of responsibility for the Design A riser
10 problem. The Design A riser could only be installed if Columbia approved it in 11 its capacity as the DOT Operator. Obviously, we now know that Columbia's 12 approval was a mistake, and it makes sense that Columbia having erred in 13 approving the Design A riser take some responsibility for its mistake. Second,
14 unlike the steel service lines which corrode slowly, and pose a low level threat, 15 the Design A riser can fail instantaneously and pose a larger risk of harm when 16 they fail. Finally, the sheer number of repairs makes a systematic approach 17 reasonable.

18 It should also be noted that implementing a solution to the Design-A riser
19 issue is much simpler than attempting to change ownership of the customer 20 service lines. The Design-A riser is typically connected above ground, with the 21 customer service line running up to the connection making the demarcation as to 22 ownership of a riser is very clear. In essence, the new installed riser could be 23 considered a component of the meter in regards to ownership. Columbia could

1 even install tags on these risers noting that the riser was a replacement of a
2 Design-A riser and that Columbia owns the new riser and would be responsible
3 for any repairs or replacements. Columbia could remove the tags once the cost of 4 the Design-A riser replacement is recovered and transfer ownership of the riser
5 back to the customer. This type of solution would resolve the Design-A riser
6 issue and allow USP and other warranty providers to continue their business of 7 providing warranties on older steel service lines.

8 Columbia's IRP should be about solving the Design-A riser issue, not 9 granting a monopoly to Columbia over the service and maintenance of service
10 lines which are not owned by the utility.

11 Q.7. Does this conclude your testimony?

12 A.7. Yes, it does.

Be Our Partner in Safe, Reliable Natural Gas Delivery

-- Menu --

What is your role?

Because you live or work in the general area of an underground natural gas pipeline system, you play a key role as our partner in keeping that system safe, reliable and secure.

We operate an underground network of pipelines and related equipment that bring clean-burning natural gas to homes, businesses and factories in your area.

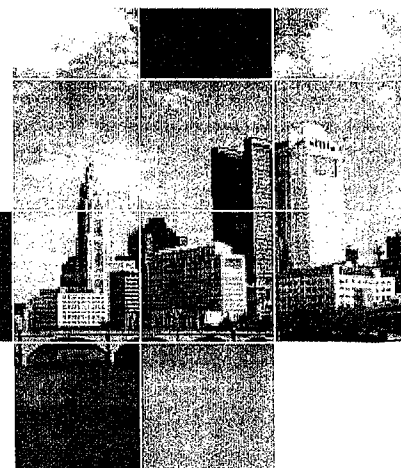

As part of our effort to increase your awareness of pipeline safety and maintenance, this brochure will explain how to identify our pipeline equipment, how to detect and report suspicious activity around them, and most importantly how to prevent damage and protect against personal injury. Please share this information with others at your address. For more information, visit www.safegasohio.org.

Be Cautious About Blocked Sewer Lines

Pipelines deliver our nation's energy

Many people don't realize the importance of our nation's natural gas pipeline system. Each day the underground invisible network of over a million miles of pipeline safely carries natural gas from supply areas to customers' homes, businesses and factories across the country.

The natural gas industry has a proven record of safety. You can learn more about the record and safety procedures by visiting the Web site of the U.S. Department of Transportation's Pipeline and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration (PHMSA), Office of Pipeline Safety at www.phmsa.dot.gov. PHMSA is the federal agency that regulates safety aspects of the gas industry.

What the gas company will do

Keeping the public and our pipelines safe is our top priority

Our gas control and monitoring center offices operate 24-hours a day, seven days a week. We regularly patrol our pipeline rights of way and conduct regular inspections of our pipeline system. Our operation employees receive regular training and are qualified under U.S. Department of Transportation standards for natural gas pipeline operators.

We spend millions of dollars each year in pipeline replacements and upgrades. Employees are on-call at all times to respond to any contingency. In addition, we work with emergency responders to make them aware of our pipelines and how to respond in case of emergency.

In accordance with federal regulations, some segments along the pipeline have been designated as High Consequence Areas. We have developed supplemental assessments and prevention plans for these highly populated areas with transmission pipelines.

Natural gas lines - What is your responsibility?

Natural gas is transported from producing wells through large underground pipelines called transmission lines. The gas then travels to cities and towns through main lines. From the main lines, natural gas is carried to your home or business through service lines, which stop at the gas meter. Columbia Gas of Ohio owns and maintains the main supply lines to the curb box at the street. However, the property owner is responsible for repairing or replacing all service lines and house lines beyond the curb box, including any that extend beyond the meter to the appliances in your home or business.

If buried piping isn't maintained, it might become subject to corrosion and leakage over time. For your safety, we inspect pipelines for leakage on a regular basis. If the line is metallic, we also inspect it for corrosion. Our routine inspection covers all gas piping between the company supply line and the meter.

If our inspection detects a problem in any portion of the piping that you own, we may interrupt your service until you have had it repaired. Any inspection, installation, repair or replacement of natural gas lines or appliances should be done only by a licensed heating/cooling contractor or plumber who is certified by the U.S. Department of Transportation. If the contractor fails to follow appropriate procedures and does not sign and leave a yellow "Service Qualification Card" at the work site, Columbia Gas will not be able to restore service.

Pipeline rights of way help protect your safety

A pipeline right of way is the strip of land over and around a pipeline. Rights of way are kept clear of obstructions to enable the gas company to safely operate, patrol, inspect, maintain and repair its pipelines. We regularly inspect our rights of ways.

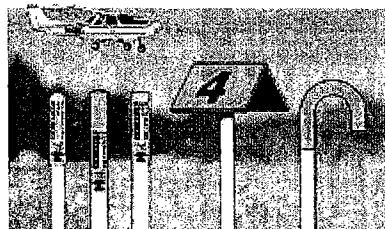

A right of way agreement between the gas company and the property owner is called an easement. Easements provide the gas company with permanent, limited interest to the land to enable us to access, operate, test, inspect, maintain and protect our pipelines. Although agreements may vary, rights of way can extend up to 25 feet each way from the center of the pipeline.

If the gas company has an easement on your property, you should be aware of our guidelines for encroachment and construction near natural gas pipeline equipment. They can be found on our Web site or by calling our toll-free number.

It's important that property owners not install any structures, store anything that could be an obstruction, or plant trees or shrubs along the right of way. Normal gardening and agricultural activities are generally acceptable. But you should never dig or construct anything in the area without first having a gas company representative mark the pipeline, stake the right of way and explain the company's construction guidelines.

How to identify underground natural gas pipelines

Natural gas pipelines are sometimes identified by markers placed at intervals along pipeline rights of way. Markers display 24-hour emergency telephone numbers and might provide other identifying information. They are generally placed wherever needed to indicate the presence of a pipeline, such as where a pipeline easement intersects a street, railroad, or river and in heavily congested areas.

Pipeline markers are important to your safety. It's a federal crime to willfully deface, damage, remove or destroy any pipeline sign or right-of-way marker.

While the markers are very helpful to indicate the presence of pipelines in the area, they don't show the exact location, depth, or how many pipelines are in the right of way. Don't rely solely on the presence or absence of a pipeline marker. Always call your state's one-call notification service to have underground pipelines marked.

Use your senses to detect a natural gas leak

Natural gas pipelines have a proven record of safety. Sometimes, however, pipeline failure can occur. Hazards associated with a pipeline failure and gas release may include blowing gas, line rupture, fire, explosion or, if gas is present in a confined area, possible asphyxiation.

Damage by outside force, often by someone digging into a pipeline, is the largest single cause of failures. Incidents may occur due to corrosion, material failure, equipment failure or other causes, also.

Look

- Dirt being blown or appearing to be thrown in the air
- Water bubbling or being blown into the air at a pond, creek, river or other wet areas
- Fire coming from the ground or appearing to burn above the ground
- Dead or dying vegetation on or near a pipeline right of way in an otherwise green area
- Dry or frozen spot on the right of way

Listen

- Hissing, blowing or roaring sound

Smell

- Rotten egg or petroleum odor

If you suspect a gas leak...Do

- If you smell gas inside, get out immediately.
- If you suspect a leak outside, turn off and abandon any motorized equipment you might be using.
- Leave the area quickly.
- Warn others to stay away from the area.
- From a safe place, call our emergency number and your fire department or police.

Don't

- Use open flame or anything that would spark ignition, such as cell phones, flashlights, motor vehicles, power tools, electrical equipment, etc.
- Attempt to operate pipeline valves

Be alert to suspicious activity

Since you live and work in an area near our transmission and service lines, we encourage you to take an active role in helping us keep our pipelines safe. Besides being aware of signs of a gas leak or digging along pipeline rights of way, please be alert to suspicious individuals or activities around our pipelines and contact police. Our employees and contractors carry photo identification and will gladly show it upon request.

Call before you dig - it's the law!

By law, anyone planning to excavate is required to call the state's one-call notification service before work begins. Whether you're planning an excavation as part of a home landscaping project or building a major development, avoid property damage and personal injury by calling the Ohio Utilities Protection Service (OUPS) at 1-800-362-2764 at least two full working days before you start to dig.

The service will notify all utilities to mark the approximate location of underground service lines that might be in the construction area at no cost to residential customers. Learn more about the law and the services OUPS provides at www.OUPS.org.

Contractors and excavators

Pipeline damage is most frequently caused by contractors doing excavation or other work that could disturb underground utility lines. Don't take chances! Dig-ins may result in loss of life, personal injury, property damage, or liability for costly repairs. Call your state's one-call notification service in advance of any excavation, or if you're planning to cross pipeline rights of way with heavy equipment or to perform blasting in the vicinity of any pipelines.

If you hit a pipeline...

If you expose, hit, or touch a pipeline or other natural gas equipment, call our emergency number immediately. Even if it looks minor at the time, a scratch, scrape, gouge, dent or crease to the pipe or coating might cause a safety problem in the future. It's important that we inspect any potential damage, whether or not it's apparent.

Emergency responders and public safety officials

As a public utility, we consider emergency responders as part of our safety team. It's important for fire and police officials to be familiar with the location of our pipeline facilities in their area. That's why we participate in meetings with other pipeline companies, mail information regularly, and routinely work with emergency responders to be prepared for any possible incident.

Emergency action guidelines

Follow these guidelines to help safeguard the public in the event of a pipeline emergency:

Do

- Report the type (leak, rupture, fire, other) and location of the emergency to your local gas company or the appropriate pipeline company immediately.
- Secure a safety zone around the emergency site and control access. This might include evacuating people within the safety zone.
- Allow gas company employees access to the area and work with them to control the emergency.
- Be aware of wind direction and possible flammable sources.
- Check sewers, drains and nearby buildings for migrated gas.
- Preserve the area for accident investigation.

Don't

- If gas is not burning, avoid doing anything that could ignite it.
- If gas is burning, control secondary fires, but do not attempt to put out a pipeline fire unless directed by gas company personnel.
- Do not attempt to operate pipeline valves.

What the gas company will do

In the event of a pipeline emergency, our company will work to control the situation immediately by taking these actions:

- Evacuate and isolate the area
- Notify appropriate public safety officials and work with them during the emergency
- Locate the site of the emergency and stop or reduce gas flow to the affected area
- Repair the equipment and restore service to customers
- Investigate the cause of the incident

Does the service line in your yard need repair to fix a gas leak?

View a list of companies with D.O.T.
operator-qualified plumbers

Be sure that your contractor meets new U.S. Department of Transportation (D.O.T.) regulations to do the required work in Columbia's service area. Since October 29, 2002, the federal government requires anyone who works on customer service lines or meter settings to be D.O.T. 'operator qualified' and participate in a D.O.T.-approved Drug and Alcohol Misuse Program. The contractor must sign and leave an "Operator Qualification Card" at the work site confirming compliance with the regulations. If work is not performed by a qualified contractor, or if the card is missing or not completed properly, Columbia Gas cannot restore service. Only D.O.T.-qualified contractors can repair or replace customer service lines and meter settings, and only Columbia can restore your gas service to your meter setting.

Operator Qualification

Operator qualification is a federally mandated program of D.O.T.'s Office of Pipeline Safety. The Web site to reference the code is ops.dot.gov/regulations/2001/part192.htm. For information about the D.O.T. Drug and Alcohol Misuse Program, visit ops.dot.gov/init/drug_alc/drug.htm.

For gas line repairs on customer-owned service lines or meter settings, please refer to local yellow pages, chambers of commerce, municipal building/permitting offices, Internet Web searches, etc. for plumbers/contractors qualified to perform the required work. You can also view a list of companies with D.O.T. operator-qualified plumbers online.

Note: In all cases, be sure to ask if the people who will perform the necessary repairs have current D.O.T. operator qualifications acceptable to Columbia Gas of Ohio. Columbia Gas also recommends checking for a picture ID or D.O.T. wallet card before work begins.

According to Federal Requirements, only workers with these qualifications are permitted to work on these facilities, even though owned by the customer. The gas service cannot be re-established without written documentation of these qualifications from the plumber/contractor. A card indicating DOT qualifications is to be left at the meter set by the plumber / contractor upon repair completion. As with any purchasing decision, consumer awareness including validating references, insurance, licensing, bonding requirements, etc., should be considered prior to the start of any repair work.

Columbia Gas of Ohio and Natural Gas Riser Safety Frequently Asked Questions

The Public Utilities Commission of Ohio (PUCO) opened an investigation in April 2005 after a series of gas leaks were linked to faulty natural gas risers. The PUCO investigation examined the types of natural gas risers being used throughout Ohio, the conditions of the installation of those risers and the overall performance of risers in an effort to gain additional information as to the cause of riser failures.

Following extensive testing of natural gas risers by a laboratory in Akron, PUCO staff issued a report in November 2006 that outlined the potential circumstances under which an operating natural gas riser may fail.

In January 2007, PUCO Chairman Alan R. Schriber requested that Ohio's natural gas distribution companies immediately begin surveying a portion of the residential customer-owned natural gas service lines (risers) in their respective territories, for the purpose of determining riser identification and the prevalence of potentially faulty risers currently installed.

Columbia Gas of Ohio (Columbia) filed an application with the PUCO in April 2007 for approval of an infrastructure replacement program.

What is a riser?

A riser connects a home or building's above ground natural gas meter to the service line. The riser is installed by a builder or subcontractor when the home or building is constructed.

Who is responsible for repair or maintenance of the riser and natural gas service line?

The owner of the home or building is responsible for the maintenance and repair of both the riser and the natural gas service line. Such maintenance or repair must be performed by certified plumbers or contractors, with the home or building owner responsible for the costs incurred. As the result of the PUCO's approval in part of Columbia's infrastructure replacement program, the company will begin to take responsibility for risers that are prone to failure and associated service lines that Columbia has determined to have a hazardous leak.

What is Columbia's infrastructure replacement program?

The infrastructure replacement program approved in part by the PUCO allows Columbia to take responsibility for the repair or replacement of risers that are prone to failure and associated service lines that are found by Columbia to have hazardous leaks. The program also allows Columbia to reimburse customers who replaced their risers or associated service lines since Nov. 24, 2006 up to set limits.

How do I know if I have a riser that could fail?

Columbia is surveying all risers in its service territory to identify those that could fail under certain circumstances. If the company identifies that you have a riser that has the potential to fail, they will replace the riser at no cost to you.

If I have received notice from Columbia that I have a riser that could fail, should I wait for the company to repair or replace the riser or should I have it replaced now by a certified plumber?

The PUCO cannot advise whether you should wait for Columbia to repair or replace your riser. Columbia plans to replace risers as quickly and efficiently as they can based upon geographic area. If you are not comfortable waiting for Columbia to repair or replace your riser and you choose to have the work done by a certified plumber, notify Columbia first and be sure to save all your receipts for the work done. You are eligible for reimbursement from Columbia for up to $500 for repairs to the riser and up to $1,000 for repairs to the associated service line if that line was found by Columbia to have a hazardous leak.

What if I have already repaired or replaced my riser?

The PUCO has approved a provision in Columbia's infrastructure replacement program that enables customers who have replaced or repaired their risers that have been identified as prone to failure and/or leaking service lines associated with those risers since Nov. 24, 2006 to be reimbursed by the company for reasonable costs of replacement. The reimbursements are capped at up to $500 for repairs to the riser and up to $1,000 for repairs to the service line. Customers should save receipts that document the work done and amounts paid.

Will this program result in higher natural gas rates?

The PUCO has not made any decisions regarding the recovery of costs for Columbia as it relates to the riser inventory and identification process or to Columbia's replacement or repair of service lines or risers. Those issues may be considered by the PUCO at a later date through procedures that have yet to be determined.

What if I have a riser, but I am not a customer of Columbia Gas of Ohio?

The PUCO plans to work with each company on a case by case basis as each local natural gas distribution company is different. Columbia, as one of the largest local natural gas distribution companies in the state, had a significant number of risers that are prone to fail and as a result the PUCO did not want to delay action on Columbia's application.
