COMMENT DESCRIPTION:

I have an all electric home and worry that the heating costs will drive buyers away and the value down. I suggest a new way to charge homes for their energy needs. Let me use the term BTU just so I can get my point across. If we look at homes in the same zone and square footage, it needs so many BTU's a day. The more units used will not matter because the cost for the BTU's would be the same for a gas, propane, oil or electric home. This way fuel is fuel your habits dictate the size of your bill and the value of the home I think would hold up. If in the winter you wanted to add a discount for amounts over so much that would work too. Water could work the same. FirstEnergy wants to buy Allegheny Energy for 4.7 million. I am not for this . Their service is poor now I.E. Cleveland Hopkins black out, the cause was salt build up on poles. Their generating capacity would go to 70% with 6 million customers. Their need to improve the national grid first. Spend my rate increases on the first. thank you
