Your Credit Score is a numerical representation of your credit worthiness that is used by most lenders and credit card issuers. Remember, Experian, Equifax and TransUnion each have their own set of credit data about you, which is why Credit Scores may vary between them.

We're sorry, a score could not be provided for this credit report. This is a rare issue, and tends to affect people who have a short credit history, haven't actively used credit in the last ten years, or have had a change in their social security status.

Step 1About your PLUS Score:

The PLUS Score, with scores ranging from 300 to 800, is a user-friendly credit score model developed by Experian to help you see and understand how lenders view your credit worthiness. It is not used by lenders, but it is indicative of your overall credit risk. Higher scores represent a greater likelihood that you'll pay back your debts so you are viewed as being a lower credit risk to lenders. A lower score indicates to lenders that you may be a higher credit risk.

There are three different major credit reporting agencies: Experian, TransUnion, and Equifax that maintain a record of your credit history known as your credit file. Your Credit Score is based on the information in your credit file at the time it is requested. Your credit file information can vary from agency to agency because some lenders report your credit history to only one or two of the agencies. So your credit score can vary if the information they have on file for you is different. And since the information in your file can change over time, your Credit Score may be different from day-to-day.

Lenders and insurers use several different credit scoring models so don't be surprised if your lender gives you a score that's different from the PLUS Score you receive online. Just remember: that your associated risk level is generally the same even if the number is not. If the lender's score is lower than your online score it is possible that this difference can lead to higher interest rates and sometimes credit denial.
