I am expressing my concern, once again, about the Duke Central Corridor Pipeline Project. When you discuss this project for possible approval, I beg the board to consider the following:

1. Does Duke have a longstanding, excellent record of operating a gas pipeline AT LEAST this size and pressure, SAFELY?
2. What does Duke's safety record look like, in general?
3. Are there court cases against Duke (in the past, or ongoing) or agency investigations into the company that bring into question their safety record or ethical behavior?
4. Would common sense dictate that a project of this magnitude and risk be undertaken in a densely populated area?
5. Are private property owners being asked to assume these risks with little or no benefit to them?
6. Does good choice threaten or protect human life?

Thank you for your consideration of these questions and issues.

Sincerely,
Desiree Johnson

COMMENT DESCRIPTION:

Please consider that the home that was destroyed in the Salem Township gas explosion was 500 feet away from the line. The man inside the home was severely burned. Duke's proposal places the gas line MUCH closer to homes, schools, businesses, and public meeting houses---sometimes within less than 20 feet. <http://www.wpxi.com/news/man-severely-burned-by-gas-line-blast-that-destroyed-salem-twp-home/248673618> Consider the following in your decision-making process:

1. Does Duke have a longstanding, excellent record of operating a gas pipeline AT LEAST this size and pressure, SAFELY? 2. What does Duke's safety record look like, in general? 3. Are there court cases against Duke (in the past, or ongoing) or agency investigations into the company that bring into question their safety record or ethical behavior? 4. Would common sense dictate that a project of this magnitude and risk be undertaken in a densely populated area? 5. Are private property owners being asked to assume these risks with little or no benefit to them? Thanks, Desi Johnson
