COMMENT DESCRIPTION:

Re: Central Corridor Pipeline Extension Project I can see the dilemma from Duke's standpoint. But to encroach on hundreds of people's properties and transform (ruin) the setting of their private residences that many of them have worked to maintain over time is asking too much. Anyone would be concerned about the long-term safety of the completed project. However, I am more concerned about the extremely negative effects to property values and property ambience by the removal of wooded areas, landscapes, and structures which I am sure will not be overcome by monetary compensation, even if Duke's compensation is considered generous by those whose property is not directly affected. Duke needs to find some other solution to their problem. I have no idea what that may entail. But it's the shareholders who should take the hit, not the property owners, and for that matter, not even Duke's customers. It surprises me that this approval/disapproval process has reached this point without being quashed. You need stop it now and let property owners get on with their lives. Thank you. Rod Kaplan
