COMMENTS: I strongly object to the implementation of wind turbines in this case. The state has taken away all rights of land owners in regards to local zoning laws and construction of the wind turbines. Such turbines encroach upon the rights of adjoining properties effectively taking away the freedom to use such property as seen fit within existing zoning regulations. The proposed turbines are taller than all but one downtown Columbus, Oh. building. This is simply not acceptable in a rural setting. As the state legislature is attempting to lessen the existing set-back rules - which are not sufficient - by measuring from an existing residence rather than the property line this makes the project even more dangerous to adjoining property owners.

I object to the project as it would change the life we rural dwellers have. There is much much more involved other than money.

I object to the project because it does not adhere to the well being of adjoining property owners based on potential and very probable health concerns as well as wildlife concerns. I object due to the proven "flicker" aspect encountered in similar projects by neighboring property owners.
