Subject: Rationale US Renewable Support

Good Climate Morning,

It has been about 40 years since US legislative interest began to become involved in promoting wind energy for reasons noted in this wiki quote:

. By using these incentives, the US can make wind power more prominent to push for renewable energy sources, in an effort to lessen its dependence on foreign oil, protect the environment, and stabilize its energy costs.[\[47\]](#) "

As we now know those goals are revealed to be poorly conceived since America is a net energy exporter, the environment has been protected from particulate pollution, the climate change as harmful disproved and the country enjoys an electrical energy over capacity.

To put it bluntly US Energy wasn't and isn't broke nor is or was a climate negative. Let solar and wind power compete in the marketplace on merits and without additional government scale thumbing.

Does Ohio have no other energy option than to disrupt a treasured lake?
