Dear FERC Commissioners and all the Peoples of the United States,

There are two issues that have to light to the point that I find that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and the Kinder Morgan partnership don't seem to be dynamic enough to keep up with the needs of the United States.

The needs to keep this nation safe and secure is the new Coal liquidification plant that is going to be a part of the Ohio Valley, which requires a steady supply of coal that can not be impeded. The customer is none other than the United States Air Force, and the fuel hungry new generation of air superiority aircraft. So Murray Energy and Oxford Mining can not be put into any situation that will stall the flow of coal to America.

The other area of concern is that the need for natural gas is no longer that necessary as compared to the need for fuel to run the America's automobiles. Resources to develop and implement this need seem to be scarce, when it is much easier to develop such fuels as E85/E87 and the required distribution network that is required to get this product to the consumers. There is currently overwhelming data about the usability of E85/E87 as a fuel in current automobiles and other internal combustion engines. Companies "in the know" are developing ethanol as an alternative to the current gasoline; this will stretch the world's supply of crude oil from what ever the current date that the oil field will run dry, by 6 fold or more. The resources to do this change over to a fuel that can be mostly made or entirely made in the United States, needs to have megalithic companies to start putting large sums of capital into having the current network of "gasoline stations" converting over to E85/E87 refueling centers. The rewards will be many fold, affordable fuel for America's automobiles; the financial gain for the agricultural industry, keep auto plants run and keeping Americans employed and of course the petroleum industry coming to alignment with the needs of the people of the United States.

I feel that Kinder Morgan should look at the real need and necessity of the United States. So the Kinder Morgan partnerships need to redirect their funding to relieving the current gasoline crisis. The Rockies Express Pipeline is now just a dinosaur compared to America's real needs, which is cheap and renewable fuel for automobiles.
