Frazier receives PCRTA Educational Grant

The Pickaway County Retired Teachers Association met in August for a picnic at the AMVETS shelter house. SYRIA to seek support for "a military response that is narrowly tailored to enforce the prohibition on the use of chemical weapons, and sufficient to protect the national security interests of the United States of America."

Erlier, at a news conference, Obama said, "I always preserve the right and responsibility to act on behalf of America's national security." In a challenge to lawmakers back home, he said Congress' credibility was on the line, not his own, despite saying a year ago that the use of chemical weapons would cross a "red line."

Secretary of State John Kerry said the nation on Syria in the next few days. The president returns home Friday night.

Obama's request also received its first hearing in the House during the day, and Kerry responded heatedly when Rep. Jeff Duncan, R-S.C., said that the secretary of state, Obama and Vice President Joseph Biden all had advocated for caution in the past conflict.

branch so intoxicating that you have abandoned past caution in favor of pulling the trigger on a military response so quickly?" Duncan asked.

Kerry, who fought in Vietnam in the 1960s and voted to authorize the war against Iraq a decade ago, shot back angrily: "I want you to fight in my country, and that wasn't a cautious thing to do when I did it."

When Duncan interrupted, the secretary of state said, "I'm going to finish, congressman," and cited his support as senator for past U.S. military action in Panama and elsewhere.

The Senate committee's vote capped a hectic few days in which lawmakers first narrowed the scope of Obama's request — limiting it to 90 days and banning combat operations on the ground — and then widened it.

Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., a proponent of aggressive U.S. military action in Syria, joined forces with Democratic Sen. Chris Coons of Delaware to add a provision calling for "decisive changes to the present military balance of power on the ground in Syria."

At their urging, the measure was also changed to state that the policy of the United States is "to change the momentum on the battlefield in Syria so as to create favorable conditions for a negotiated settlement that ends the conflict and leads to a democratic government in Syria." McCain, who has long accused Obama of timidity in Syria, argued that Assad will be willing to participate in diplomatic negotiations only if he believes he is going to lose the civil war he has been fighting for over two years.

The changes were enough to attract bipartisan support, but political fault lines were clear on a military action that polls show a war-weary public opposes.

Seven Democrats and three Republicans supported the measure, while five Democrats and five Republicans opposed. Among Republicans, opposition came from lawmakers with the closest ties to tea party activists, including Paul and Florida Sen. Marco Rubio, both presidential aspirants.

Among Democrats, Kerry's replacement in the Senate, Sen. Ed Markey, D-Mass., voted "present" after expressing misgivings.

In his comments in Sweden, the president sought to shift the focus for responding to Assad to Congress and the world at large. "I didn't set a red line" with the world set a red line with a treaty banning the use of chemical weapons. He added that Congress set a red line "when it passed legislation a decade ago demanding Syria stop production of weapons of mass destruction."

His comments drew a disbelieving response from one Republican back home. "He needs to go back and read his quote," Sen. Shy Charles of Georgia said, referring to a comment the president made slightly more than a year ago. On Aug. 20, 2012, Obama said, "We have been very clear to the Assad regime, but also to other players on the ground, that a red line for us is starting seeing a whole bunch of chemical weapons moving around or being utilized. ... That would change my calculus" about military action, he added at the time.

Elsewhere on Wednesday: — In Syria, al-Qaida-linked rebels were said to have launched an assault on a government-held Christian mountain village in the densely populated western part of the country, and there was new fighting near Damascus as well.

— In Rome, Pope Francis underscored Vatican opposition to threatened military strikes against Syria, urging Catholics and non-Catholics alike to take part in a day of fasting and prayer for peace on Saturday.

— In France, Prime Minister Jean-Marc Ayrault told parliament that a failure to take action would allow Assad to launch more chemical attacks.

By his country's intelligence, the Syria has an arsenal of material. Sen. Richard Durbin, D-Ill., citing a French estimate, said at the Senate meeting that Assad has an estimated 1,000 tons of chemical weapons material and "may be in the chemical weapons world's superpower."

Kerry said Assad had used chemical weapons 11 times but until the most recent attack the president did not have a "compelling" enough case in push for a U.S. military response.

Few if any members of Congress dispute the administration's claim that Assad was responsible for the attack, and lawmakers in both parties appear far more focused on determining how they should respond.

During the House committee hearing to order, Rep. Ed Royce, R-Calif., said that while it would be important to deter the use of chemical weapons by Assad and others, there remained many unanswered questions, including what the U.S. would do if Assad retaliated.

"The administration's Syria policy doesn't build confidence," he said.

In a letter to her rank and file, Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi of California said she had received suggestions for legislation in the House "to add language to prevent boots on the ground, to tie the authorization more closely to the use of chemical weapons and to address concerns about an open-ended timetable."

Water boil issues hit Red Raiders football

BY CHRIS MILES
Sports Editor

In recent years there has been a major push by the Ohio High School Athletic Association and other sports governing bodies to make sure athletes are properly hydrating themselves, especially at this time of year when the temperatures are usually extreme.

Well those hydration challenges have been magnified at London High School where the city is less than a week into what could be a two week mandatory boil alert.

The high school sports season is just getting underway and that means the start of football two-a-day practices.

"We're trying to get enough bottled water to keep the kids cooled down," Red Raiders football coach Jerry Wasserman said.

Not being able to run a hose and hydrate could've been a major problem, but this far the coach said his program has been able to get by thanks to a number of donations of bottled water to the program.

"We've gotten some nice donations," Wasserman said. "We're very thankful. There are a couple pallets of bottled water and our staff is doing a good job of keeping that water clean and ready for the guys."

Another thing helping the Red Raiders in its battle to stay hydrated is the fact that the weather this week is expected to be in the upper 70s or low 80s compared to the mid 90s where it was a year ago at this time.

Less heat means less sweating and a slightly lesser need for water, but Wasserman said cooler temps aren't exactly the best thing either.

"Cooler is better when it comes to practicing," he said.

"But what are you going to do when the weather snaps and all of a sudden it's hotter just in time to play games?"

"The cooler temperatures are nice for a while, but ideally you want to practice in the conditions you're going to be playing in."

All four area high school football teams are in the midst of two-a-day practices.

At Madison-Plains High School first-year head coach Jason Hunt has his Golden Eagles going through two-a-day practices in the evenings.

While the coach said it was more because a number of his assistant coaches are not available during other times, his team will likely avoid practicing in the hottest part of the day.

Members of the Madison-Plains football team learn get drinks of water and try and cool down during the team's first two practices Monday. The Golden Eagles are practicing in the evenings when the weather should be cooler.

'Friends of Woody' to gather again

The seventh annual Friends of Woody golf scramble will be held to raise funds to fight prostate cancer and honor the memory of Woody Dilone.

Dilone was an 18-year prostate cancer survivor and loved the game of golf. So it seemed appropriate to hold a scramble and donate funds to the James Cancer Hospital and Solove Research Institute.

Specifically, all funds ($52,100 to date) have been donated to the Prostate Cancer Prevention Fund #31023024, managed by Dr.

Steven Dilone, who is dedicated to finding a way to prevent prostate cancer.

This year's event will start with the first flight teeing off at 5 a.m. on Saturday, Aug. 24, at the London Country Club, 1199 Spring Valley Road, London.

If you would like to play golf, donate or be involved in any way, contact Nancy Dillon at (740) 852-6789. Friends of Woody is a 501(c)(3) organization and all contributions are tax deductible.
