dates who oppose the project—a high-profile symbol of the political debate over climate change. But other Democrats are boosters of the pipeline, and the party's control of the Senate after the 2014 midterm elections may hinge on them.

Jones told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee the Canada-to-Texas pipeline is a litmus test of whether the U.S. is serious about national and global energy security. Approval of the pipeline would help ensure North America becomes a global energy hub and a reliable energy source to the U.S. and its allies, Jones said. Rejecting the pipeline would "make Mr. Putin's day and strengthen his hand."

Jones, who left the Obama administration in 2010, now heads a consulting firm that has done work for the American Petroleum Institute, the oil industry's chief trade group, and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. Both groups support the pipeline, which is backed by a number of Senate Democrats facing tight re-election races, including Mary Landrieu of Louisiana, Mark Begich of Alaska and Mark Pryor of Arkansas.

Landrieu, who chairs the Senate Energy Committee, pressed Secretary of State John Kerry on the pipeline issue Thursday at an appropriations hearing. Landrieu called approval of the pipeline "critical" to the national interest and said in Louisiana, "it's hard for us to even understand why there is a question" whether it should be approved. The State Department has jurisdiction over the pipeline because it crosses a U.S. border.

Kerry told Landrieu he was "not at liberty to go into my thinking at this point," but added: "I'm going to look at all the arguments, both sides, all sides, whatever, evaluate them and make the best judgment I can about what is in the national interest."

GOP hits health care hard after House election

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional Republicans attacked Obamacare with new ferocity but sometimes questionable veracity Thursday, energized by a triumph in Florida that gave health care issues their first airing of the election year.

"We're reminded this week that the American people are still concerned about the president's health care law," House Speaker John Boehner said at a news conference where he also challenged Obama to roll back pending cuts for private Medicare coverage plans.

Some Republicans made accusations that were unprovable or even untrue. Among them was a claim by Boehner that Obamacare had resulted in fewer people having health insurance coverage than before the law was passed.

Census Bureau figures show the number of insured has risen from 255.3 million in 2009, the year before the law was passed, to 263.2 million in 2012.

Dear Annie:
Cremation seems to be getting more popular, but advisory notices from the cremation societies all say that there is at present be others waiting to be solved. Perhaps people could make a provision in their will that a DNA sample be preserved. — P.J.
