Dear Public Utilities Commission,

I'm writing in regards to the more than doubling of DP&L's mandatory residential fixed fee dubbed a "customer charge". Please reconsider. This creates a burden for low and middle income families. At a minimum, charges should be in line with the amount of energy a customer uses and not a fixed flat fee.

My family would also like to see the Public Utilities Commission push the idea of clean energy in our area. Clean energy creates a better environment and in turn, a better society and planet for the future. We have to protect the long-term health of our planet for future generations. We also need to maintain the current conditions of the environment so that there is a future to work towards.

With the rise in energy prices and the growing concern for a cleaner environment, consumers are becoming more aware of renewable energy technologies. The use of energy from plentiful sources such as the sun and wind has many benefits - it reduces our dependence on fossil fuels, helps the environment and ultimately saves consumers money.

In addition to these issues, DP&L should encourage energy efficiency and not punish customers who reduce their energy use. This can be accomplished by using smart meters, the offering of rebates and incentives, etc.

Thank you.
