RE: Generation Pipeline LLC – Letter of Notification Submittal
Ironville Lateral
OPSB Case NO. 18-1601-GA-BLN

Dear [REDACTED],

As indicated in a prior letter, Generation Pipeline LLC (“Generation”) is planning to construct a new 16-inch steel natural gas pipeline in the Cities of Toledo and Oregon in Lucas County.

PROJECT DESCRIPTION

Generation is proposing to construct a steel natural gas pipeline (Project). The Project will be 16” in diameter and approximately 1.54 miles in length. The Project will begin at an existing 24” transmission pipeline west of North Lallendorf Road and north of Seaman Road in Oregon Township, Lucas County, Ohio. The Project will extend northwest paralleling CSX railroad tracks across Corduroy Road, Otter Creek Road and York Street before turning north across the railroad tracks across BOC America Gas property and then northwest to an end user facility. The end user facility is the new Cliffs Natural Resources iron briquette processing plant. A map depicting the location of the proposed project corridor is attached to this letter.

OHIO POWER SITING BOARD – LETTER OF NOTIFICATION SUBMISSION

The Letter of Notification (“LON”) has been filed with the Ohio Power Siting Board (“OPSB”) and is currently pending. The LON asks the OPSB for authority to construct the pipeline described above. This project was assigned Case No. 18-1601-GA-BLN.

LOCATION AVAILABLE TO VIEW LON

The LON submittal is available for viewing at the following locations:

Toledo-Lucas County Public Library: 3340 Dustin Road, Oregon, OH 43616

Generation Office: 445 Hutchinson Avenue, Suite 830, Columbus, OH 43235

U.K., E.U. push forward with planned exit deal

May still fighting to keep her job

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — The United Kingdom and the European Union plowed ahead Monday with plans to have their exit deal signed, sealed, and delivered within days as British Prime Minister Theresa May waited to see whether lawmakers opposed to the agreement have the numbers to challenge her leadership.

The draft agreement reached last week triggered an avalanche of criticism in Britain and left Mrs. May fighting to keep her job.

British and E.U. negotiators are racing to firm up a final deal before a weekend summit where E.U. leaders hope to rubber-stamp it.

The 585-page, legally binding withdrawal agreement is as good as complete, but Britain and the European Union still need to flesh out a less detailed, seven-page declaration on future relations.

Mrs. May said “an intense week of negotiations” lay ahead to finalize the framework.

The deal has infuriated pro-exit lawmakers in Mrs. May’s Conservative Party.

Supporters of Britain’s E.U. exit want a clean break and argue that the close trade ties called for in the agreement Mrs. May’s government agreed to would leave Britain a vassal state, bound to E.U. rules it has no say in making.

Two Cabinet ministers, including exit Secretary Dominic Raab, resigned in protest.

Others are trying to gather the signatures of 48 lawmakers needed to trigger a no-confidence vote in Mrs. May as party leader.

One Conservative lawmaker, Simon Clarke, urged wavering colleagues Monday to join the rebellion.

“It is quite clear to me that the captain is driving the ship at the rocks,” he said.

Even if Mrs. May faces down such a challenge, she still has to get the deal approved by Parliament.

It is unclear what would happen if Parliament rejected the deal when it is put to a vote, likely next month.

Mrs. May’s government relies for survival on the votes of Northern Ireland’s Democratic Unionist Party, which struck a deal last year to back the Conservatives on major legislation, including finance bills.

But the DUP opposes the exit deal’s plans for keeping the border between the U.K.’s Northern Ireland and E.U. member Ireland open after Britain leaves the European Union.

In a warning to Mrs. May, DUP lawmakers abstained Monday during several votes on the government’s finance bill.

Mrs. May argues that abandoning the plan, with Britain’s March 29 departure date just over four months away, could lead to the E.U. exit being delayed or abandoned, or to a disorderly and economically damaging “no deal” exit.

Labor Party leader Jeremy Corbyn said his lawmakers would vote against Mrs. May’s agreement and also try to block a “no-deal” exit.

The agreement also must be approved by the European Parliament.

Most contentious negotiating issues have been resolved, but Spain insisted at the Brussels meeting that it needed more clarity on how Gibraltar, the British territory at the southern tip of the Iberian peninsula, would be dealt with.

VOLCANO OF FIRE ERUPTS AGAIN

Guatemala’s Volcan de Fuego, or Volcano of Fire, spews hot molten lava from its crater early Monday. Authorities have asked several communities to evacuate. Hundreds are still missing after a deadly eruption devastated the region in June.

Hong Kong activists go on trial

Group wants to change city elections

NEW YORK TIMES

HONG KONG — The leaders of a Hong Kong protest movement pleaded not guilty Monday to public nuisance charges stemming from the pro-democracy demonstrations that disrupted the city for more than two months in 2014.

The Occupy movement began as a peaceful protest that eventually drew tens of thousands of people, paralyzing traffic in Hong Kong.

The protest leaders demanded universal suffrage in the city’s elections, vowing to escalate their civil disobedience until they reached their goals.

Three men who founded the movement in March, 2013 — professors Benny Tai and Chan Kin-man and a retired pastor, Chu Yiu-ming — pleaded not guilty Monday to a charge of conspiracy to commit public nuisance.

Six others also pleaded not guilty to related charges, with the individual offenses carrying maximum sentences of seven years in prison.

The 2014 protesters were demonstrating against what they said was the city’s undemocratic way of choosing its leaders.

Hong Kong’s chief executive is selected by hundreds of people picked to represent the city’s various constituencies.

Critics of the system say the representatives skew heavily in favor of pro-Beijing candidates who do not represent the popular choice of the people.

Occupy leaders said the trial would give them an opportunity to present to the public their version of the protests, which also became known as the Umbrella Movement.

“A movement can be crushed but not defeated,” Mr. Chan said after the trial was adjourned. “They can jail our bodies, but they can never jail our soul.”

The Occupy movement gained strength when leaders joined forces in 2014 with student strikes against efforts to impose a so-called patriotic education curriculum similar to that taught in mainland China.

The resulting civil disobedience blocked major roadways in Hong Kong’s main business districts for 79 days and gained sympathy when police used tear gas on protesters who refused to disperse.

Many residents, drivers, and business owners grew irritated by the disruptions resulting from the protests.

More than 900 people were arrested during the 2014 protests, 118 of whom have been convicted of various offenses.

They include three prominent faces of the student movement — Joshua Wong, Nathan Law, and Alex Chow — who spent time in prison last year before their sentences were thrown out by Hong Kong’s highest court on appeal.

But in doing so, judges warned that in the future they would be stricter with offenders charged with incitement who “cross the line of acceptability.”

The nine organizers who appeared in court Monday were not charged until last year.

In a report released before the trial began, Amnesty International said such delays created uncertainty for hundreds of other protesters.

The start of the trial Monday drew crowds of supporters and pro-democracy lawmakers chanting slogans and holding yellow posters and umbrellas that evoked the 2014 protests.

Rebels to stop rockets to Saudi Arabia

SANAA, Yemen — Yemen’s Shiite rebels said Monday that they will halt rocket fire into Saudi Arabia for the sake of peace efforts, answering a key Saudi demand in the latest push to stop the civil war in the Arab world’s poorest country.

But the rebels also said they had fired a ballistic missile into Saudi Arabia overnight in response to an attempted border incursion and a Saudi airstrike, and they reserved the right to respond to attacks.

For the last three years, a U.S.-backed, Saudi-led coalition has been waging war against the Iran-aligned rebels, known as Houthis, to restore Yemen’s internationally recognized government.

U.N.: Funding gap to aid refugees closed

AMMAN, Jordan — The U.N. agency for Palestinian refugees says it has nearly closed its funding gap after securing new donor pledges to make up for U.S. aid cuts.

The U.N. Relief and Works Agency said Monday that the shortfall was reduced from $446 million to $21 million.

Correction

A letter from a reader in Pages of Opinion on Sunday, with a headline “Heartbeat bill ignored constitutionality,” misstated rates of infant mortality. It should have said the infant mortality rate in Ohio was 7.4 per 1,000 live births in 2016, compared with the national average of 5.9 per 1,000 live births.
