Subject: Feathering

Bored,

As you the Board all well may be with the Turbine Follies. Did you happen to catch the irony in the proposal to employ "feathering", the term of art for the overnight turbine shutdown, while night time migration by our feathered friends could be verified by two years of radar tracking?

Have you thought about the absurdity of a guy from Norway hoping to make a buck despoiling our lake? No beautiful lakes in Norway to experiment with?

You know what's not right here is the underlying premise that man-made co2 is harmful and global temperature is out of control.

You have entertained turning the turbines off overnight for two years to study migratory creature patterns. How about delving into the recommendations in "Lukewarming" by Patrick Michael and Paul Kappenberger and sending the whole project back to Norway while actual science confronts political science in the crucible of the daily weather report.

What's the rush? The grid isn't going anywhere! And why should it?

Another excellent reference for evaluating the politics distorting the science is "Scientocracy" by Michael's and Terence Healey.

Thank you for your willingness to listen. And, I hope, read.
