Many of the public comments documented by PUCO on the Icebreaker project, are reminiscent of the very many statements of disgust that were expressed regarding the construction of the Eiffel Tower in Paris, back in 1887.

Some of those attacks were detailed, suggesting that the structure would collapse prior to completion. Other attacks were simple: "It will be monstrous and useless".

However, as construction began, more and more appreciation evolved, as Parisians - and then people around the world - came to understand that the emerging tower's beauty was coming from engineering calculations - the kind of beauty in which 'form follows function'. The Eiffel Tower was transformed from an "Object of Hatred to a Beloved Symbol" (National Geographic, 11/5/20.)

We can hope that those first wind turbines out on Lake Erie will undergo the same rapid evolution.
