As a concerned resident I feel these solar farms will do nothing to help advance our economy. Initially there will be some jobs created but once the farms are complete the majority of the jobs created will disappear quickly. Maybe an upkeep contract here and there which will only supply a handful of jobs. Can the companies and the farmers renting their land guarantee property values will not devalue as many have chosen to call this home and have worked hard at having nice properties. Also after the contracts are up will the companies even be around to provide the removal and clean up of all the panels and concrete? I really don't think this is being thought out by the people renting their land. These companies will vanish and when it's time to clean up the said properties it will not be cost effect for the next generation to get the properties back to original condition.
