Questions I would love to have answered, and I mean legitimately answered. What is the difference, other than the commissioner's PERSONAL opinions, between solar projects and the massive amount of farm ground being sold off in the name of progress? The subdivisions going in (and for upper class sales at that), the massive farm ground loss across from Arby's for businesses to buy and do construction on, the drainage and massive interruption of every day life for a couple of years in Wilmington (including massive flooding causing Progress Way to be closed for a time), the ruined farm ground waterlogged by Airborne Road runoff since it's existence? Lots of farm ground has been sold off at the owner's discretion, so leasing for solar is no different. I see livestock barns being erected without problems- we should all be in control of our own properties. No one else's. The commissioners are saying the community can do without the massive tax monies from Yellow Wood also. And if this is denied, I assume every property will have to be cleaned up immediately by the owner-junk cars and scrap removed, lawns mowed and weeded, broken and ugly fences taken down? Thank you!
