AEP Ohio proposed increase in delivery charges, given the current state of energy, goods and services inflation in our country is what seems, in the current politics of making fossil fuels a weapon to be used against their customers to make fossil so expensive it will inflict severe economic hardship to satisfy a political objective.

Along with this I don't understand how AEP Ohio can create and include informational flyers in every bill that is mailed to customers for years, but doesn't have the decency to include a flyer to announce and explain their filings for rate increases?

I was informed by a puco employee that the only requirement the utilities have is to post in local newspapers. Perhaps 20 ago that might be a honest way to inform the public, today the Columbus Dispatch only reaches less than 10% of the population in Columbus.

Finally, her is a direct quote from the president of the Columbus Urban League which shows how AEP Ohio manages their money:

“IMPACT Community Action required those who showed up for gift cards to show and ID and an AEP Ohio bill that matched the name on the ID.

The Columbus Urban League is requiring people to upload a photo of their IDs so that zip codes can be cross-referenced with the outage areas.

But Hightower admits that is not a fool-proof process.

“This is about the honor system,” she said. “If you lost power, and you lost food, or you had to go to a hotel, or you had to go live with somebody else for a couple of days, we're going to take people at their word. And there are always going to be some bad apples out there, bad actors, who are going to try to take advantage of the system, but you know what, none of us have time to really try to figure that out.”

Thank you for putting this letter on the docket.
