We are the authors of American Hospital Association (AHA) Best Practices in Energy Procurement (2017) and Business Planning for Energy Resiliency (2018).

Our services are founded on the three best practice principles:

1. Alignment: Energy is a financial market that operates under financial rules. Successful energy procurement and management decisions are best accomplished by forming an energy committee consisting of facilities, finance and supply chain leaders.
2. Aggregation: Acting alone, a single hospital's energy spend may not command the respect of suppliers. However, a group of hospitals can aggregate to create buying power in the market, thereby leveraging lower costs and greater access to the best products and contracts. This is best accomplished by working through a common GPO.
3. Analytics; Because energy is a financial market, the key to driving energy savings and value is to employ financial analytics. This approach creates transparency and allows hospitals to address a wide range of energy issues ranging from procurement, efficiency, resiliency and sustainability. Analytical tools should be used to inform energy strategy, forecast market trends and ensure an optimal balance of savings opportunity and budget stability.

Environ Energy, LLC f/k/a Hospital Energy, LLC's ability to organize internal hospital decision-making, aggregate spend to drive savings and provide leading ledge financial analytics set us apart from other advisors operating in the healthcare sector.
