U.S., Russia hold highest-level talks since Ukraine invasion

NEW DELHI (AP) — U.S. Secretary of State Antony Blinken and Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov talked briefly Thursday in the highest-level in-person talks between the two countries since Russia’s invasion of Ukraine. But there was no indication of any movement toward easing the intense tensions between their two nations.

The short encounter came as relations between Washington and Moscow have plummeted over Russia’s war with Ukraine and tensions have soared amid a myriad of disagreements, complaints and recriminations on other matters ranging from arms control to embassy staffing and prisoners.

U.S. officials said Blinken and Lavrov chatted for roughly 10 minutes on the sidelines of the G-20 conference of foreign ministers in New Delhi. But there was no sign of any progress and the conference itself ended with the grouping unable to reach consensus on the Ukraine war.

Still, with relations at perhaps their lowest point since the Cuban Missile Crisis during the Cold War, the mere fact that the two men met showed that, at least for the moment, lines of high-level communication between Washington and Moscow remains open.

At a news conference, Blinken said he told Lavrov that the U.S. would continue to support Ukraine for as long as it takes and would push for the war to end through diplomatic terms that Kyiv agrees to.

“End this war of aggression, engage in meaningful diplomacy that can produce a just and durable peace,” Blinken said he had told Lavrov. But, he noted that “President Putin has demonstrated zero interest in engaging, saying there’s nothing to even talk about unless and until Ukraine accepts and I quote ‘the new territorial reality’.”

Blinken said he also urged Russia to reverse “its irresponsible decision and return to” participation in the New START nuclear treaty.

“Mutual compliance is in the interest of both our countries,” Blinken said he told Lavrov. He added “that no matter what else is happening in the world, in our relationship, the United States is always ready to engage and act on strategic arms control, just as the United States and the Soviet Union did even at the height of the Cold War.”

Blinken said he also urged Moscow to release detained American Paul Whelan and that “the United States has put forward a serious proposal. Russia should take it.”

Earlier, Blinken had told the G-20 meeting that Russia’s war with Ukraine could not go unchallenged.

“We must continue to call on Russia to end its war of aggression and withdraw from Ukraine for the sake of international peace and economic stability,” Blinken said. He noted that 141 countries had voted to condemn Russia at the United Nations on the one-year anniversary of the invasion.

Yet, several members of the G-20, including host India, China and South Africa, chose to abstain in that vote and despite appeals from top Indian officials to look beyond their differences over Ukraine and forge consensus on other issues, the foreign ministers were unable to do so or agree on a final communique.

Indian Foreign Minister Subrahmanyam Jaishankar said there were “divergences” on the issue of the war in Ukraine “which we could not reconcile as various parties held differing views.” “If we had a perfect meeting of minds on all issues, it would have been a collective statement,” Jaishankar said.

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi had earlier appealed for all members of the fractured G-20 to reach consensus on issues of particular concern to poorer countries even if the broader East-West split over Ukraine could not overcome.

“We all have our positions and our perspectives on how these tensions should be resolved,” Modi said. “We should not allow issues that we cannot resolve together to come in the way of those we can.”

China and Russia objected to two paragraphs taken from the previous G-20 declaration in Bali last year, according to a summary of Thursday’s meeting released by India.

And Blinken lamented that “Russia and China were the only two countries that made clear that they would not sign off on the text.”

The paragraphs stated that the war in Ukraine was causing immense human suffering while exacerbating fragilities in the global economy, the need to uphold international law, and that “the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons is inadmissible.”

Despite the failure to achieve full consensus, Blinken said it was positive that 18 of the 20 nations had agreed on a statement calling for an end to the war and immediate steps to improve energy and food security that have been badly affected by the conflict.

Lavrov, who did not mention speaking with Blinken when he held a news conference after the G-20 session, told reporters that Moscow would continue to press its action in Ukraine. He shrugged off Western claims of Russia’s isolation, saying “we aren’t feeling isolated. It’s the West that has isolated itself, and it will eventually come to realize it.”

He said Russia remains open to talks on ending the conflict in Ukraine, but he accused the West of effectively blocking such talks.

“They are calling on us to have talks, but I don’t remember any Western colleagues calling on Ukraine to have talks,” he said. “They are encouraging Ukraine to continue the war.”

Lavrov also mocked U.S. threats against China, which has presented a peace plan for Ukraine that has been applauded by Moscow but dismissed by Washington and its Western allies.

“Our Western colleagues have lost self-control, forgotten their manners and put diplomacy aside, switching exclusively to blackmail and threats,” he said.

Russia had no immediate comment on the substance of the conversation, but Russian Foreign Ministry spokesperson Maria Zakharova said Blinken had asked to speak to Lavrov.

It was their first contact since last summer, when Blinken talked to Lavrov by phone about a U.S. proposal for Russia to release Whelan and formerly detained WNBA star Brittney Griner. Griner was later released in a swap for imprisoned Russian arms dealer Viktor Bout, but Whelan remains detained in Russia.

Whelan, a Michigan corporate security executive, has been held for four years on espionage charges that his family and the United States government have said are baseless.

"My Life, My Dreams, My Desires: No Deposit, No Return" is a thoughtful look back on life's challenges and victories. The book is the creation of published author Ed Banks, a dedicated husband, father, grandfather, and great-grandfather who spent over thirty-two years in management positions. He held titles such as maintenance supervisor, production manager, and director of operations in the health management industry. He has both an associate's degree in business management and a bachelor's degree in business administration. Banks is a forty-one-year licensed basketball official and once officiated both baseball and football. Banks was born in West Virginia as the first male born to a family of nineteen children, all to the same parents. Banks shares, "The title of the manuscript is a direct reflection on how I achieved a desired work and personal life, and what I achieved from the content of my dreams. What I did achieve took work on my part that sometimes required years of dedication. What I wanted, what I worked for always resembled 'No Deposit, No Return!'" Published by Christian Faith Publishing, Ed Banks' new book will entertain readers while imparting sound advice based on faith. Banks hopes to aid others in their pursuit of a satisfying life experience as he recounts the steps needed to build and nurture both personal and career success. # Jewett commends PD, progresses with mayor's court

BY CORNELIA GRACE
Harrison News-Herald Reporter

JEWETT—The Jewett Village Council met on February 20 for one of their regular bi-monthly meetings. The council heard from Village Administrator Mike McBee, who explained plans to work on the three-way stop in town. "I spoke with [Kovarik Excavating] about the three-way stop," He said. "What we're going to have to do is cut like a 12 foot by 14 foot rectangle out of the middle of the rectangle." He said the issue would likely be stone replacement and then put in concrete to cover it with the intention to hot-patch it later. The intersection has been needing attention for quite some time, and this project will hopefully fix the issues. Council Member Joshua Walters suggested new town signs, a topic that has been brought up a few times. "It'll look classy when you come in," Walters said. McBee and Walters will need to gather more information for sizing and cost before the council moves forward with the project. Police Chief Ron Carter gave a short report about a school bus incident that was dealt with in the last week. A vehicle had passed a bus while it was stopped to pick up kids. The incident was immediately reported, and the driver was found within an hour. "He was cited for a slew of charges," Carter said. School bus safety is a serious concern, and the department was commended by the council for the swift response.

"Hats off to the police department," Walters said. Carter went on to share that he is currently working on getting a new car radio for the department; this was an expense approved by the council at the first February meeting. There are two kids, known to the department, riding around in a vehicle running stop signs, and driving dangerously. Carter said he has alerted his officers that once caught, the vehicle needs to be impounded and the juveniles cited. "I hate to do it, but they're running down Main Street and cutting cars off," Carter said. He also made a point to mention that residents with side-by-sides and 4x4s need to get the proper registration stickers. Unregistered vehicles will be impounded. Mayor George Bailie reminded council members that the old ordinances need to be read through and updated. Members can review them at any time in the administration building. This has been an ongoing project for the village to review and clean up older ordinances. Bailie also updated the council on the progress he's making toward creating a mayor's court for the village. A mayor's court, as the name implies, is run by the mayor of a village or town residing over legal cases. The court usually only hears traffic cases, violations of city ordinances, and other misdemeanors that are low-level offenses that will not result in jail time. "I checked on it, got all my paperwork to start on it," Bailie said. "I'm moving forward on it ... hopefully, within a week, I'll have it completed."

Cadiz CIC entertains pickleball idea

BY KRISTI TULLIS
Harrison News-Herald Staff Writer

CADIZ—The Cadiz CIC met on February 16 for its monthly meeting. During opening discussions, it was stated there were no new updates to offer on the timeline for the demolition of the old post office. It was noted, however, that James White Construction has cleaned the area that has been used for storage, and the county commissioners have approved the job. Concerning the remaining houses slated for demolition, the next round of bids will open on March 2 at 9:30 a.m. The old ODOT property is presently moving dirt to allow for the insertion of concrete into abandoned coal mine shafts. Once complete, ComptonAddy will close on the property and begin construction. Next up, Woodsfield Bank is purchasing and extending the amount of LED lights that will be supported by aluminum poles.

It was announced that the CIC would meet with OMEGA regarding the Appalachian Community Grant Program with state-procured planners. Other upcoming meetings will discuss technical assistance grants and project funding allocation that is part of the revitalization plan. This could also possibly allocate money for the old Family Dollar building as well. Further details were discussed on the price of the building and the process to complete the purchase. Lastly, it was proposed by the Village of Cadiz that basketball, pickleball, and tennis courts be installed for residents and visitors. Since this is in the beginning stages of development, the CIC will request that the village gets estimates for more than one court and then propose the plan with funding expectations to be finalized in agreement with the CIC. The next meeting is scheduled for March 16 at 6 p.m.

LOOK AT THE PAST

Dry Ridge School By Susan Adams

Dry Ridge School, or School No. 5, was located in Freeport Township on County Road 57, Sec 23. Dry Ridge School had four different buildings. The first building was on the Andrew S. Carr farm and was used until 1868. The second little building was situated in the corner of District No. 5 but, because of its location, was unfit for the purpose for which it was built. When it was finished, they thought it must have a name. Some called it Possum Trot, some No. 5, some the Devil's Half-Acre, but it ended up being named Frog Pond. The location was down in a hollow where there was nothing but a mud-hole. There was no road to the school. Think of a public school with no road to it. Good water was scarce. It was muddy year-round and had a good supply of frogs and wiggle-tails that had taken over the spring. The children suffered from thirst. Some of the neighbors locked their springs against them, and the poor little children had to wander around and get water wherever they could find it. Folks described the location as a place "Where the eye of God had never seen, nor the foot of man ever trod." Not long after 1880, the building was torn down and moved up on the ridge and became Dry Ridge again. In 1882 a brick building (pictured here, which was a nice building) replaced the frame one. This building is still standing today. One can see it to the right as one starts down Covered Bridge Road off of Dry Ridge Road. Some of the family names were Steadman, Blackwoods, Hughes, Wittington, Alexanders, Lawrence, Toland, McClelland, Mayes, Karr, and Breen. The last teacher was Forest Thaxton in 1932. From the book "Lest We Forget - Harrison County Early Schools," the picture is from the collection at the Harrison County Historical Society.
